BLACK COUNTRY MUSIC

On Tuesday, March 27, New Hampshire College will present a musical program unique in this area: Down Home, Country Blues. At 8:00 p.m. in its Student Center, NHC will feature Mance Lipscomb - a black blues man from Texas. The 77-year old Lipscomb, who has been a farm worker nearly all his life, describes the music form:

"We people had sad thoughts, so we sang sad songs - the blues. We sang to get things off our minds, the way we were living, the way we were treated. Son, you'd be sick if you knew some of the things we've been put through."

Though famous throughout his native Texas, Mance never played outside the state until - at the young age of 65 - he appeared at the 1961 Berkeley Folk Festival. Since then his talents have been appreciated throughout most of the U.S.A.

So, for an evening of Black country music in the raw, remember March 27 at NHC.
